

You Deserve the Best—Make Sure You Get It!

When confronted with a serious illness, three out of four patients will not seek a second opinion. Rather they will choose to adhere to their doctors recommended treatment on the assumption that he/she is offering the best and latest therapy. This is not always the case. Read this story about one of our clients.

Following a colonoscopy, a 66-year-old man was diagnosed with a colorectal polyp for which a difficult surgery requiring a colostomy was recommended due to its type and location. Wanting to see if he had other options, the man contacted The Health Resource to order a report on his diagnosis and a specialist list to identify the names of top colon and rectal cancer surgeons.

He sought a second opinion from Dr. Robert Beart, Jr., a prominent colon and rectal surgeon at the University of Southern California/Norris Comprehensive Cancer Center. Dr. Beart determined he could safely and effectively remove the polyp in an outpatient, non-invasive surgery, which he did successfully.
